PROFESSIONAL MARKETING North America

Benefit from the wisdom of some of the most experienced practitioners in the field of professional services marketing.

pmNA magazine is only available to members of the PM Forum.

Here are the kind of articles you can look forward to:

Virtual Campaign, Real Results

Nobody expects a rock video to announce an office relocation. That's why Preston Gates' virtual open house and office tour developed for its new Orange County office was so effective in capturing the imagination of clients.

Stepping Out of the Traditional

Bass, Berry & Sims' approach was definitely non-traditional. A print ad was created to grab the attention of the entertainment industry and to show the firm as not quite so staid and stogy as they had been depicted in the past.

A Ten-Point Marketing Checklist

With increased competition, marketers can't afford to miss a trick. Jean Marie Caragher offers a checklist of what you need to stay aware of to ensure that your 2004 marketing program is complete.

A Cover-to-Cover Read

Most firm brochures are not read by clients and go directly into the round file. But by focusing on clients instead of themselves, Pillsbury Winthrop created an Annual Review that attracted a very favorable response.

Networking for Professionals

While networking can be a very effective way to market your services, if you think it is an inexpensive undertaking, think again. Done improperly, it can waste enormous amounts of time and money.
